Complete Breath 1

Level 1 / Posture 17

Take a deep breath while bringing your hands up over your head.

Link your fingers together

Fill your lungs to bursting! Right to the top!

Hold your breath briefly

Slowly let the air go while your arms float down to your sides.

Breathe out through your mouth. This is OK for now and will help you pace your breathing.

Pause Repeat Do 3 repetitions

Yoga Snack The Complete Breath feels good any time: first thing in the morning; at the office for quick stress relief; at the end of a long hard day while; while you're waiting for the bath to run; just before bed to take the knots out.

All yoga routines start with a good, warm up breath and stretch. Complete Breath 1 is one of the simplest. It's a good, quick stress reliever. It's an excellent way to refresh your body with lots of good oxygen and quickly stretches away stress!

Tip We're not looking for ram-rod straight here. (This isn't the military!) Just stand with your arms falling in line with your hip bones, but without forcing anything, and you'll be standing fairly straight without working hard at it

Discovery

You might not be as straight as you'd like at first. Some muscles might not be in shape enough to hold this pose for long and let you be relaxed about it. In time, with lots of different yoga stretches, this position will come more naturally.

Tip Almost everyone tightens up their knees when they do this exercise. If you soften your knees, (unlock them), you will still remain standing, but your body won't be working as hard.

Benefits: A good warm up for the body, stretching out knots in the whole body; wakes up the breathing muscles; prepares you for practicing yoga; refreshes you with some good, solid breathing; releases stress quickly.

Benefits of Optional Variation:

Builds balance; strengthens ankles; lays the foundation for "grounding" exercises.
